Stunning trio Destiny's Child — Beyoncé, Michelle Williams, and Kelly Rowland — treat themselves to a well-earned beauty break at the luxurious Mandarin Oriental Hotel in London.

We hear . . . we hear

THAT Martha Plimpton will replace Parker Posey in the Off-Broadway hit "Hurlyburly" on June 11 because Posey is filming "Superman Returns" . . . THAT former Secretary of State Colin Powell is getting $200,000 per speech, "and that's only in the U.S." Powell could get up to $1 million per in Asia later this year . . . THAT dapper legal eagle Ed Hayes, who represented the estate of Andy Warhol, had to buy himself a pair of bespoke $4,000 Berlutti shoes when he learned that Warhol liked to wear them . . . THAT Danny Aiello has a problem roasting his nephew, Yankee broadcaster Michael Kay, at the Fordham University benefit at Tavern on the Green June 13. "It will be really difficult to say anything negative about him because I love the kid so much," says Aiello. Freddie Roman won't be similarly constrained . . . THAT Maxim Magazine is trying to lure Hamptonites to the Borgata Hotel in Atlantic City the weekend of June 25 for the mag's "big" party hosted by Sean Combs. Good Luck! . . . THAT "Jack of all home trades" Randy Florke will launch "Your House, Your Home: Randy Florke's Decorating Essentials" (Hearst Books) at APT on Tuesday.

Contract may have kinks

JANICE Min, the tireless editrix who took over the reigns at Us Weekly when Bonnie Fuller jumped ship to American Media, is involved in torturous contract negotiations with publisher Jann Wenner of Wenner Media, according to our spies. "They are trying to cheap her," one insider said of Min, who was declared editor of the year by Mediaweek. A spokeswoman for Wenner Media said, "Janice is under contract and there are no problems."
